Annemarie Bouma graduated as biologist and as veterinarian. She did a PhD in 1997 on the epidemiology of Aujeszky's disease. From 2002-2015 she worked as associate professor at the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine. Since 2011 she is working at the ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries, Food Security and Nature, in the Hague. As policy officer she is involved in the prevention and control of various infectious animal diseases, like avian influenza, African swine fever, SARS-CoV-2 in mink, and bluetongue. She also participates in issues regarding European legislation and WAOH. Currently she is working on a plan to come to a vaccination programme against HPAI in the Netherlands.
